Racial Equity Lens

Voice: How will we engage and consider the experiences, voices, and perspectives of those most affected by inequities? How are we ensuring that those most affected by inequities have a seat at decision-making tables?

Data: How will we collect and analyze data about race and ethnicity (e.g., disaggregating data, identifying disparities, using qualitative data)?

Root Cause: What are the root causes (e.g., policies or practices) of the racial or ethnic disparity we are attempting to address?

Solution: How will our proposed action/strategy address the root causes of the racial or ethnic disparity we are attempting to address (e.g., changed policy that reduces or eliminates a disparity based on race or ethnicity)?

Outcome: If we succeed, how would things be different? What is the equity outcome we are hoping to achieve?

Privilege: How might our role, power, and privilege be affecting our interactions, discussions, reflections, and decisions? How might our role, power, and privilege be affecting our ability to authentically collaborate and partner?

WHERE WE ARE MOVING
Our emerging strategy builds on our earlier investments that were focused on developing, implementing and spreading student-centered learning.

Student-centered learning will remain a part of our grantmaking efforts — though what we mean by — including its fundamental tenets - is evolving. And it will not be a grant requirement.

We anticipate a wider array of effective practices in terms of racial equity outcomes will be included in any expanded definition.

When we do support student-centered learning we will emphasize racial equity outcomes. And we will focus on the cultural, structural, and policy environments that reinforce inequities within our education system and communities.
